

April Stevenson

April Stevenson is dedicated to helping the community with their animal related needs. She started her career in animal sheltering at the Peninsula Humane Society and SPCA and took her passion to Berkeley Animal Care Services where she worked as an Animal Care Technician, Animal Control Officer, and Community Services Specialist who managed the volunteer program and behavior program. With her love for medical she also worked as a veterinary technician at an emergency pet hospital, volunteered at the Marine Mammal Center, and assisted other wildlife rehabilitation centers. Over the last few years, she worked as a Shelter Operations Manager at the Placer County SPCA and is now an Animal Services Officer for the City of Rancho Cordova where she continues to advocate for reducing the number of animals entering the shelters while attending college full-time. She believes that progressive education and valuable resources offered to the public can solve many of the community animal needs. April is currently working on creating an animal focused humane academy program for residents in her jurisdiction and aspires to work as a director for a municipal animal shelter one day.
