I joined the Sacramento SPCA 3 years ago as a HQHVSN surgeon after working as a general practice veterinarian for 17 years. I immediately enjoyed the larger collaborative work environment and supportive staff and fellow veterinarians. Once I began providing surgical services to our shelter animals, to prevent euthanasia and to help them become more adoptable, I was hooked. I have since taken on the role of Chief of Surgery and now can directly help even more shelter, community, and owned pets. We are expanding our low-cost medical and surgical services to allow more owned pets to be treated and kept out of the shelter and in their loving homes. I'd like to continue to be in a position where I can help breakdown many of the barriers to veterinary care for people in our community.

In my off time, I enjoy gardening, reading, everything artistic, and spending time with my husband, daughter, and menagerie of pets.
